

California Certified Air Cleaning Devices

This page last reviewed April 8, 2016

All portable indoor air cleaning devices sold in California after October 18, 2010 must be certified by the California Air Resources Board. To be certified, air cleaners must be tested for electrical safety and ozone emissions, and meet an ozone emission concentration limit of 0.050 parts per million. These and other requirements such as specific labeling language are required in Title 17, Sections 94800 - 94810, of the California Code of Regulations.

The list below shows air cleaning devices certified for sale in California. We will update the list as devices are certified. Air cleaners that are listed as "Mechanical" are air cleaners that use physical filtration only and do not typically generate ozone. Air cleaners that are listed as "Other" may emit ozone, but they have been tested and found to produce an ozone emission concentration less than 0.050 parts per million. This category includes ionizers, electrostatic precipitators, other electronic filtration devices, and other air cleaners using new technologies.

Please note that, because there is a backlog at the ozone testing laboratories, there are some other air cleaners that are safe but have not yet completed the testing and certification process. You may wish to consult our guidance on selecting a suitable air cleaner.
